

Moose are well known to be avid eaters. An observer might spend hours watching them do nothing else. They are also very skilled swimmers. What we have seen before with Cordie is that moose can do both at the same time. But the yearling bull Frizz was surprisingly adept at it. For the better part of a half-hour, we watched as he swam around in circles in a lake, scooping up and gobbling down large wads of pondweed as he paddled. He finally dragged himself slowly out of the water, as if both satisfied and burdened by his haul. We are always fascinated to watch moose eat, play, and cavort in the water, especially when they are calves...
